HAPPY MOTHER'S DAY

There is something special we all share as humans. We were carried around inside our Mothers, where we were provided with all we needed until we had grown strong enough to survive out in this world. Mothering didn't stop there because our Mother's continued loving and caring for us, helping us to gradually grow into the independent persons God intended us to be.

On Mother's Day, we think of our own mothering and thank God and our Mother's for the fullness of life. Today, and during the month of May, we also remember with affection, Mary, the woman who agreed to Mother the Son of God.

NO CHARGE

My little boy came into the kitchen this evening while I was fixing supper and he handed me a piece of paper he'd been writing on and after wiping my hands on my apron I read itand this is what it said:

- For mowing the yard - five dollars
And for making my own bed this week - one dollar
And for going to the store - fifty cents
And for playing with little brother, while you went shopping - twenty five cents
Taking out the trash - one dollar
Getting a good report card - five dollars
And for raking the yard - two dollars
Total owed - fourteen seventy five.

Well I looked at him standing there expectantly and a thousand memories flashed through my mind. So I picked up the pen, turning the paper over, this is what I wrote:

- For nine months I carried you, growing inside me - NO CHARGE
For the nights I've sat up with you, doctored you, prayed for you - NO CHARGE
For the time and tears, and the cost through the years, there's NO CHARGE
When you add it all up, the full cost of my love is - NO CHARGE.

- For the nights filled with dread, and the worries ahead - NO CHARGE
For advice and the knowledge and the cost of your college - NO CHARGE
For the toys, food and clothes and for wiping your nose - there's NO CHARGE, son
When you add it all up, the full cost of my love, is - NO CHARGE

Well, when he finished reading he had great big old tears in his eyes and he looked up at me and he said, "Mama, I sure do Love You." then he took the pen, and in great big letters he wrote: "PAID IN FULL. " . . . When you add it all up the cost of real love is - NO CHARGE

God Bless, Fr. Mike

Giggles: An optimist fell out of a ten story building. As he passed the fifth floor he was heard to say, "Safe so far."

A well- known politician asked one of the opposition to loan him fifty cents to call a friend. "Here's a dollar," offered the other. "Take it and call all your friends."

Adult Faith Formation—the general breakdown

Pre-Vatican II Catholics, whose central values and spiritual life were shaped in the period before the Second Vatican Council, are the adults born before 1945. This group makes up about seventeen percent of adult Catholics. Some describe them as “Catechism Catholics” because a catechism was the principal tool used in their faith formation. These Catholics “respect civil and religious authorities; they were taught to do what their elders asked them to do. The Church is a very important part of their lives; they believe in it and know they have to support it. They are most likely to emphasize the Church’s authority and the importance of participating in Church” (D’ Antonio, et al., 70). They have a strong Catholic identity (defined by how important the Catholic Church is to one’s life, whether one would ever think of leaving the Church, and attendance at the Eucharist).

Vatican II Catholics, born between 1946 and 1964, are formed in the Catholic Church of Vatican II. They comprise about thirty-three percent of adult Church members. They are the generation of seekers (Roof) who have “mixed feelings about authority (versus making up their own minds) and institutional commitment (versus personal spirituality)” (D’ Antonio, et al., 70). Various studies have shown that commitment to the Catholic Church and a sense of Catholic identity are less strong among this generation than among their parents’ cohort. At the same time, one still finds that much of the Catholic identity of this generation has been inherited from the pre-Vatican II Catholics, and the residue of an ethnic Catholic culture persists, especially among the oldest members of the cohort. One can see, however, a loosening of institutional ties among these Baby Boomer Catholics.

Post-Vatican II Catholics fall into the group of people born between 1964 and 1980, which has been labeled Generation X. They are sometimes called “Christian Catholics” to emphasize their lack of a strong Catholic identity. These adults comprise about forty percent of adult membership and are much more loosely connected to the institutional Catholic Church. Scott Appleby, professor at the University of Notre Dame, said, “Previous generations had their Catholic identity given to them. This generation has had to create their own.” One often finds they don’t create their identity out of a whole cloth but rather out of bits and pieces they find helpful and meaningful. As such, their Catholic identity is more like a quilt.

Millennials are the emerging adult generation, born in the 1980s and ‘90s, who are coming of age and being formed by the culture of the late 1990s and the beginning of the new century. At this time they make up less than ten percent of the Catholic adult population. However, it appears that the Millennials have an even more tenuous relationship with the Catholic Church than the Gen-Xers. Catholic identity for this group, that is, loosely connected and weakly committed. Yet this generation seems to emphasize many devotional aspects that puzzle their elders, especially the Vatican II Catholics, who hold most of the leadership positions in church ministry (except for youth ministry).

These four generations gather at the same Eucharistic table as sons and daughters of God. Each of these generations brings a different set of experiences to the faith, and looks at faith through a different lens. Is this diversity a blessing or a burden? Adult faith formation programs need to honor these differences and keep them in mind when designing educational programs.

A Church focused on mission, a Church of disciples, engaged with the culture and proclaiming the kingdom of God, has the potential to reverse the trends cited at the beginning of this paper. A Church focused on mission can attract the young adults who are looking for something and someone to believe in. Adult faith formation will play an essential part in forming adult disciples for the mission. It will take a reprioritizing of resources to bring about a different culture in the Church, but it will be worth it. Let us begin now.
